

THE INTELLIGENCER

Published every Tuesday, at 85 for six months beginning in October.

P. J. SINCLAIR, Esq.,

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1861.

The Intelligencer.

The date of the Weekly Intelligencer is two days anterior to the issue of the paper this week. This was caused by the unavoidable delay in getting started. After this week the Intelligencer will be issued every Tuesday. We receive news by telegraph every day, and are therefore able to give our readers the very latest intelligence. This will be especially advantageous to all our readers where mails leave here on Tuesday and Wednesday.

We send a number of the Intelligencer to every Postmaster, and desire them to act as agents, to exhibit the paper and receive subscriptions for it. Of those who do so we will send a copy of the paper gratuitously.

To Our Readers.

We issue today the first number, third volume, of our Daily paper. We do not profess to interest our readers much until the Telegraph line shall be completed, which will be in one or two days at earliest.

We trust our friends will bear with us until the line is finished, when we will give them the news fresh from the telegraph wires.

We have much to contend with at present, in the way of getting up a nice paper, but in a few days we will overcome all difficulties, except that which lies in the way of the paper.

YANKEE TASTE.—We set by the Tribune, that the Massachusetts Legislature is going to have a sterner chaplain. This is characteristic of the Yankees, of course, a Black Republican only can be elected. The progress of a minister will hereafter be weighed by the complexion of his politics.

Leave North Carolina.

Where does North Carolina stand?

Mr. C. H. Miller.

Therefor disposition of North Carolina has been such, as to be appreciated very improperly, by those citizens of our country who are unacquainted with the politics, and perhaps they exist in this State, before the commencement of Mr. Lincoln's administration as President of the United States.

Our changes have been preferred against many of her people, charges of disloyalty, charges against her soldiers, her traitor portrayers, and even Gov. Vance has not escaped their malice, and the shameful reports of vicious and wicked men.

But this finding has been imputable to very great extent, and while the size of a few men should not conduce to infamy a whole people, we can do that there has been seemingly good reason to believe that a number of our citizens were either very ignorant, and unskillful in the lesson of political wisdom, or that they have been governed by very impure motives, and are in the highest degree traitorous, and untrue.

Then to prevent misapprehension in the future, to do justice to North Carolina as a State and people, while we seek not to defend these who have sought to pull down the noble edifice which has been erected on the firm and solid foundation of a proper feeling of patriotism, and a deeply imbedded sentiment of resistance to every form of tyranny and despotism, let us endeavor to show to the country and to the world, that our cause may be misapplied when the history of this rightous war is written, when North Carolina stands, and define the difference between an independent support of a constitutional Government, and a blind and unreasoning adoration of an administration, however pure and patriotic we may esteem it.

Point out the distinction between an impartial criticism of the men now of a government which is disposed to rely too much on its own strength, and a general repudiation of all its principles.

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that the people of this country have been led into error by the statements of the newspapers, and that they have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that

they have been led into error by the

statements of the new papers.”

Another voice—“I am sorry to say that

the people of this country have been

misled into a course of conduct which

is injurious to the South, and that